

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

This weekend was heavenly... road-tripping through Maine, taking in an incredible farmers market (easily my favorite in the entire book) and a fantastic craft fair. The weather was cool and I drove with the windows down, basking in the coastal breeze. I wasn't under a time crunch, which is normally the case when I am on the road, hitting event after event, so I was able to stop whenever something caught my eye.

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

One such unplanned stop was in the adorable seaside town of Wiscasset, where I stumbled upon the most fabulous antique shop, The Marston House. To enter the shop, you had to weave your way down a small garden path, which added to the overall charm and allure of the shop.

Once inside, I struck up a long conversation with the owner, Sharon, and was delighted to learn that many of the fabulous finds in her shop came from France, where she and her husband spend half of the year. Do you want to take a peek at what I found?

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

I could have snapped up every item in the shop, especially the richly colored antique linens and various feed sacks. The vintage notions were very tempting as well...but I was good, and just shopped through the lens of my camera! I did leave filled with inspiration, and a feeling that I will make Wiscasset a planned stop on my next Maine trip!

Sunday, August 29, 2010

A Drive up the Coast - The Marston House

